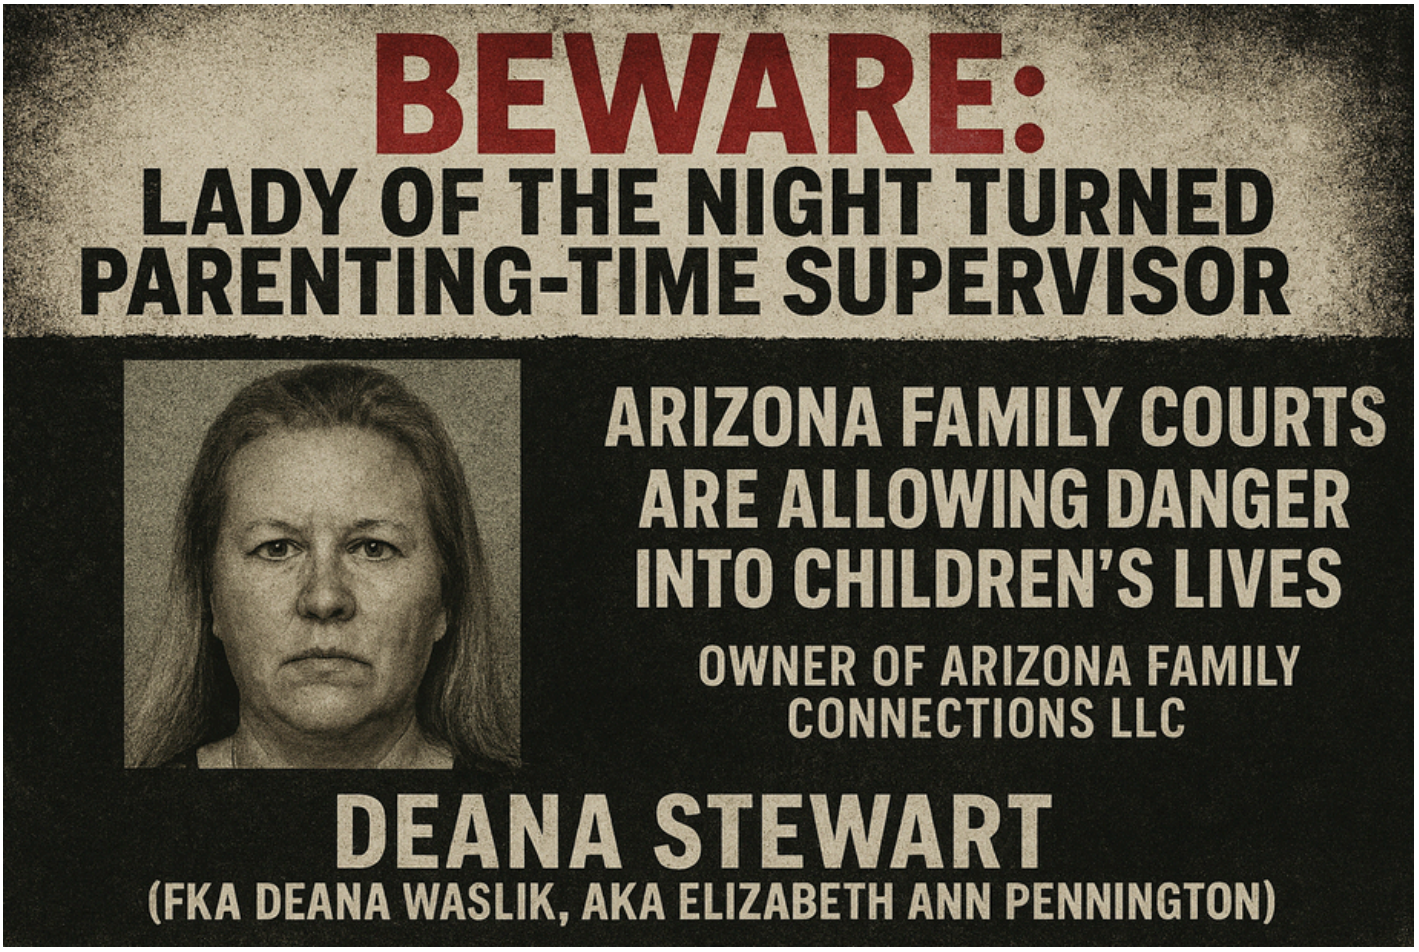
Arizona’s Family Court Failure: A Known Sex worker Supervising Children



BEWARE:
LADY OF THE NIGHT TURNED PARENTING-TIME SUPERVISOR
ARIZONA FAMILY COURTS ARE ALLOWING DANGER INTO CHILDREN’S LIVES
OWNER OF ARIZONA FAMILY CONNECTIONS LLC
DEANA STEWART
(FKA DEANA WASLIK, AKA ELIZABETH ANN PENNINGTON)

Phoenix, AZ — Arizona’s supervised visitation industry has become a breeding ground for abuse, corruption, and unchecked power. Parents are being forced by judicial coercion to pay thousands of dollars to private individuals and companies just to see their own children. Many of these providers have violent criminal records, active protection orders, and fake credentials. Some were even court-ordered to have supervised visits with their own children yet now supervise other families. These individuals are entrusted with minors while operating entirely outside any meaningful state oversight. Court ordered supervised visitation in Arizona's Family Courts has become a punishment for parents who are not a danger to their children. It is a dangerous, unregulated scheme that exploits vulnerable families and operates with near total impunity.

The time for silence is over. Arizona's family court system has become a breeding ground for exploitation, negligence, and abuse. Children are being placed in the hands of unlicensed, unvetted individuals operating a criminal syndicate within our family court system.

This isn't a mistake. It's a system built to exploit. And we're done staying quiet. The names, businesses, therapists, attorneys, consultants, and judges behind it are all being exposed.

Supervised by Criminals: Arizona's Child Custody Crisis

Arizona's supervised visitation industry is part of a larger web of profit-driven services orbiting the family court system. These industries, from custody evaluators to reunification therapists to visitation monitors, form what many advocates and whistleblowers now call a money-making RICO machine: a racketeering-style network where court orders funnel families into private services that are unregulated, unlicensed, and often unqualified. The longer the litigation drags on, the more money flows through this closed-loop system, regardless of the harm to children.

At the center of this machine is Arizona's supervised visitation industry, which is populated by private individuals and companies operating without proper licensure, oversight, or accountability. While some present themselves as trauma-informed or therapeutic professionals, many have no formal credentials, and some have deeply troubling criminal histories. These providers are often appointed by judges or recommended by attorneys or therapeutic interventionists, leaving families with no choice but to comply or risk not seeing their children.

One troubling example involves the owner of a local supervised visitation company who has received referrals from both Arizona family courts and the Department of Child Safety (DCS). Despite being entrusted with vulnerable children, this individual has a well-documented history of violence, as reflected in court records. In additional to multiple orders of protection filed by women citing threats and abuse, his criminal background includes arrests for:

- Disorderly Conduct involving physical altercations
- Possession of a weapon on school grounds
- Obstruction and resistance of law enforcement
- Aggravated Assault

The fact that someone with this level of documented violence is permitted to supervise children under court mandate is another systemic failure of Arizona's Family Court system that places families at risk.

Despite this record, the individual was reportedly entrusted with access to children and families under court mandate. Shockingly, they were also ordered supervised visits with their own child while involved in the industry, raising serious concerns about how Arizona courts are vetting those they appoint to oversee vulnerable families.

This is far from an isolated case. Across Arizona, numerous supervised visitation companies operate under similarly alarming conditions staffed by individuals without licenses, shielded from public accountability, and financially intertwined with key figures in the state's family court system. These entities are part of what whistleblowers describe as a cartel-like structure known as the AFCC Pipeline, where judges, attorneys, and court-appointed professionals refer families into a closed network of private services. Families are compelled by court orders to participate, often at staggering emotional and financial cost with zero regard for the well-being or safety of the children or their parents. The system prioritizes profit, not protection, and those trapped inside it are left voiceless and vulnerable.

Deana Stewart (FKA Deana Waslik, AKA Deana Wasilk AKA Elizabeth Ann Pennington): Another Bad Actor Operating in Arizona Family Courts

Perhaps the most alarming figure in Arizona's supervised visitation scheme is Deana Stewart, who was formerly known as Deana Waslik, Deana Wasilk and uses several aliases including Elizabeth Ann Pennington. She is the owner of Arizona Family Connections, LLC, a business that claims to offer supervised visitation, trauma recovery coaching, life coaching, and overnight supervised visitation, a service that Arizona courts do not authorize and that raises immediate red flags when offered. She allegedly claims to be a Peer Recovery Support Specialist, conducts video and telephonic supervised visits, and charges parents for these sessions. She also offers parenting classes and therapeutic visitation despite having no clinical training, no licenses, and no qualifications to provide any of it.

Life Coaching

Recovery Peer Support Specialist

Her business operates out of a UPS Store mailbox in Peoria, Arizona, and she promotes herself as a life coach, recovery coach and spiritual coach on platforms like Noomii.

But her criminal record spans multiple states and identities:

- Prostitution arrest in Oklahoma during a 2013 sting targeting massage parlors (KOCO News, OKC Fox, KFOR)
- Soliciting prostitution in Las Vegas, Nevada under the alias Elizabeth Ann Pennington
- Soliciting prostitution in Clark County, Nevada under the same alias
- Felony Grand Larceny and Misdemeanor Trespass in Nevada
- Prostitution charge in Osceola County, Florida under the name Deana Waslik

- OFFERING TO ENGAGE IN AN ACT OF PROSTITUTION in Oklahoma under Deana Waslik
- USE OF A COMPUTER FOR THE PURPOSE OF VIOLATING OKLAHOMA STATUTES in Oklahoma under Deana Waslik
- Probation violations and miscellaneous misdemeanor convictions consistently in Oregon dating back to 1989

The use of multiple aliases, combined with a history of sex-related offenses, theft, and deception, raises urgent questions about the true nature of Stewart's business. Her promotion of overnight visitation, trauma services, and her attempts to remove her criminal history from the internet suggests a deliberate attempt to mislead courts and families.

Is This a Front for Something More Dangerous?

The most disturbing aspect of Stewart's operation is her promotion of overnight supervised visitation, a service that is virtually unheard of in legitimate supervised visitation programs. Arizona courts do not authorize overnight supervised visits through private providers. These arrangements are typically reserved for licensed residential programs or foster care settings.

Overnight visitation refers to a specific arrangement in which a child or children spend extended periods of time with a non-custodial parent or caregiver, typically lasting one or more nights. This type of visitation is often part of a custody or parenting plan and may occur on weekends, holidays, or during vacations. Overnight visitation is intended to provide the child with an opportunity to build and maintain a meaningful relationship with both parents while ensuring their well-being and safety. It can be a critical component of co-parenting in cases of divorce or separation, as it allows for a more comprehensive and continuous involvement of both parents in the child's life. The specifics of overnight visitation schedules and conditions are typically determined through legal agreements or court orders, taking into consideration the child's age, needs, and the parent's ability to provide a suitable environment.

Given Stewart's repeated arrests for soliciting prostitution, her extensive criminal history, and the bizarre array of services she claims to offer, serious questions must be asked:

- Why is she being entrusted with children?
- Who is monitoring these overnight visits?
- Is this a legitimate business or could it be a front for something far more exploitative?

There is no evidence at this time of formal trafficking charges, but the pattern of behavior, lack of oversight, and court-enabled access to vulnerable children demands immediate investigation.

Not an Isolated Case: Arizona's Family Courts Are Enabling Known Offenders

Deana Stewart is just one example of a broader, deeply troubling pattern. Another supervised visitation provider who was actively receiving referrals from both Arizona family courts and the Department of Child Safety (DCS) has a documented history of violence that should disqualify him from any role involving children. For the safety of the victims currently protected by active orders of protection, including a child, his name will not be disclosed publicly.

Court records reveal a disturbing trail of criminal behavior, including arrests for:

- Disorderly conduct involving physical altercations
- Possession of a weapon on school grounds
- Obstruction and resistance of law enforcement
- Aggravated assault

In addition to these charges, multiple orders of protection have been filed against him by multiple women citing threats, intimidation, and abuse. Yet despite this violent history, he was entrusted with court-ordered access to vulnerable families despite being court ordered supervised visits with his own child while working in the industry. The conflict of interest and lack of oversight are staggering.

Across Arizona, supervised visitation companies are operating under similarly alarming conditions, staffed by individuals without licenses, shielded from public accountability, and financially entangled with judges, attorneys, and court-appointed professionals. Whistleblowers have described this network as the AFCC Pipeline: a cartel-like structure where families are funneled into private services through court orders, often at enormous emotional and financial costs.

These companies are not simply negligent; they are profiting from the trauma of families while operating under the protection of a system that refuses to regulate them. Arizona's family court infrastructure has become a breeding ground for exploitation, where oversight is absent, accountability is nonexistent, and dangerous individuals are given unchecked access to vulnerable children. Referrals are handed out without vetting, credentials or lack thereof are ignored, and families are forced into compliance under threat of court sanctions including loss of their children. This is not just a broken system, it is state-sanctioned abuse, where profit is prioritized over protection, and the safety of children is considered collateral damage.

The System That Enables It

Arizona's family courts routinely mandate supervised visitation through private providers, many of whom are not licensed, not vetted, and not regulated. These providers are paid directly by families, creating a profit-driven model that incentivizes prolonged supervision, repeated evaluations, and unnecessary interventions.

Investigative reports from Re:Public and YourNews reveal that many of these referrals are part of what whistleblowers call the AFCC Pipeline, a closed-loop network of judges, attorneys, and court-appointed professionals affiliated with the Association of Family and Conciliation Courts (AFCC).

This tightly woven network operates with the hallmarks of an organized criminal enterprise. Through a cartel-like structure, insiders strategically refer cases to one another, manipulate evidence, and exert influence over those in positions of authority. Financial kickbacks are disguised, while children are treated as commodities, brokered between providers, evaluators, and attorneys. The longer the litigation drags on, the greater the profit, with human suffering fueling a system designed for exploitation.

Further reporting from YourNews details how unlicensed providers are wrongly granted quasi-judicial immunity, while protective parents are silenced and retaliated against.

Custody by Corruption: How Unlicensed Providers Decide Children's Futures

In Arizona's family courts, unlicensed and unvetted supervised visitation providers and other court appointed providers are routinely allowed to submit written reports and testify in custody hearings.

Individuals with documented histories of violence, forged credentials, and zero professional qualifications are being granted disturbing levels of control over families in crisis. Without any legal or clinical authority, they are permitted to influence decisions about where children reside, who they are allowed to see, and whether protective parents retain custody. Their unchecked role in these critical determinations represents a systemic betrayal of justice and, in many cases, amounts to state-sanctioned child abuse.

Why Is the Court Relying on Their Testimony?

Because the system is designed to do so. Under the guise of "best interest of the child," judges often defer to these providers as if they were neutral experts, even when they lack any recognized qualifications. The AFCC Pipeline enables this by creating a closed-loop referral system where insiders appoint one another, suppress evidence, and prolong litigation for profit.

These providers are often treated as quasi-experts:

- Their reports are accepted into evidence without challenge.
- Their courtroom testimony is given weight equal to licensed professionals.
- Their recommendations can override objections from parents, attorneys, therapists, and even medical professionals.

Constitutional Violations

This practice raises serious constitutional concerns:

- Due Process Violations: Parents are denied fair hearings when decisions are based on unqualified or biased testimony or reports.
- Equal Protection Violations: Families are treated unequally based on their ability to pay for court-mandated services.
- First Amendment Violations: Protective parents who speak out against these providers are often retaliated against or silenced.

As YourNews reports, Arizona's family court system has evolved into a closed-loop referral network that commodifies custody, silences dissent, and rewards abusers with unchecked power. The use of unlicensed providers as de facto experts is not just unethical, it's unconstitutional.

And supervised visitation is only one piece of the puzzle. Arizona's family court crisis includes:

- Custody evaluators with conflicts of interest
- Therapists who broker children for profit
- Parenting coordinators who operate without oversight or appeal
- Judges who ignore evidence of abuse and retaliate against protective parents
- A closed-loop system that rewards compliance and punishes dissent

The Alcott Scandal and the Bigger Picture: Arizona's Family Court is a Dumpster Fire

One of the most egregious examples of this corruption is the case of Kristyn Alcott, owner of Family First Forensic Consultants LLC. Alcott repeatedly testified in Arizona custody cases while falsely claiming to be a licensed social worker, therapeutic supervisor and even acted as an investigator in some cases. She submitted affidavits, signed reports, and influenced judicial decisions despite having no verified credentials and no legal authority to provide the services she billed families for.

Victims report being forced to pay thousands of dollars for court-mandated services while Kristyn Alcott profited through false testimony and illegal patient brokering schemes. She faces serious allegations of perjury and impersonating a licensed professional, and disturbing video evidence circulating online shows her physically assaulting her own child. Yet, despite this documented misconduct, Alcott continues to be appointed by Arizona courts to oversee other families while clearly unable to manage her own. Repeated warnings to state officials, including the Governor Katie Hobbs and Attorney General Kris Mayes, have gone unanswered. Their continued inaction not only enables this abuse of Arizona's families, but it also creates direct liability for ignoring the exploitation by a system that offers them no recourse, no protection, and no justice.

Alcott's case is not an outlier; it reflects the broader crisis. Arizona's family court system has become a sanctuary for fraud, abuse, and exploitation. The supervised visitation industry is just one of many corrupt branches feeding off the trauma of families. Until there is accountability, oversight, and reform, the system will continue to harm the very people it claims to protect.

Entrenched Abuse: The State-Created Danger of Arizona's Family Courts

When government actors including judges, agencies, and court-appointed professionals knowingly place families into harm's way through unregulated, unlicensed, and criminally compromised providers, the crisis ceases to be a failure of oversight. It becomes a state-created danger. This doctrine, recognized in constitutional law, holds that when the state affirmatively acts to expose individuals to known risks, especially through coercive systems like court orders, it bears direct responsibility for the resulting harm.

Arizona's family court system has done just that. It has empowered individuals with violent criminal histories, falsified credentials, and no formal training to supervise children, submit falsifies reports under oath, and commit perjury testifying in custody cases often resulting in children being placed into the custody of their abuser. Arizona has ignored credible warnings, silenced protective parents, and retaliated against whistleblowers. And it continues to funnel families into a closed-loop network of profiteers under the guise of justice.

This isn't just corruption, it's state-sanctioned exploitation. And under the state-created danger doctrine, Arizona officials may now face legal liability for the trauma, abuse, and constitutional violations inflicted on its citizens. The time for reform has passed. What's needed now is federal intervention, criminal prosecution, and systemic dismantling.

How to File a Complaint Against Arizona Family Court Corruption

If you or someone you know has been harmed by unlicensed providers, fraudulent court-appointed professionals, or systemic abuse within Arizona's family court system, you have the right to file formal complaints with multiple agencies.

Here's how:

U.S. Department of Justice – Civil Rights Division

If your constitutional rights have been violated, whether through denial of due process, discrimination, retaliation, or exposure to a state-created danger within Arizona's family court system you have the right to file a formal complaint with the U.S. Department of Justice Civil Rights Division. This federal office is responsible for enforcing laws that protect individuals from abuse and discrimination by government actors and institutions.
File a Civil Rights Complaint with the DOJ

Arizona Attorney General – Consumer Fraud Division
If you've been financially exploited by court-mandated services, unlicensed providers, or deceptive business practices tied to Arizona's family court system, you can file a Consumer Fraud Complaint with the Arizona Attorney General's Office, led by Attorney General Kris Mayes. Her office is responsible for investigating unfair, misleading, and unlawful business practices under the Arizona Consumer Fraud Act.
Submit a Consumer Fraud Complaint Online

Arizona Attorney General – Civil Rights Division
If you've experienced discrimination, civil rights violations, or systemic abuse within Arizona's family court system you have the right to file a formal complaint with the Arizona Attorney General's Civil Rights Division, led by Attorney General Kris Mayes. Her office is charged with enforcing state civil rights laws and protecting vulnerable residents from exploitation and injustice.
Complete the Civil Rights Intake Questionnaire

Arizona Governor's Office
To report systemic abuse or call for executive intervention, you can reach out directly to Governor Katie Hobbs, whose duty is to serve and protect the people of Arizona. Her office is accountable to the public, and every citizen has the right to voice concerns, demand oversight, and push for meaningful reform. Whether you're sharing your story or calling for action, your message deserves to be heard.
Contact the Arizona Governor's Office

To the bad actors embedded in Arizona's family court system:

Your time is up.

For too long, you've exploited vulnerable families under the guise of authority, hiding behind fake credentials, corrupt referrals, and quasi-judicial immunity. You've silenced protective parents, profited off trauma, and placed children in harm's way. But the truth is no longer buried. The evidence is overwhelming, our voices are rising, and the public is watching.

Accountability is coming. Every lie, every abuse of power, every dollar taken from families in crisis will be exposed. You will be held responsible, not just in the court of public opinion, but in the court of law.

WARR ACRES, OK — Police in Warr Acres arrest several women at four different massage parlors after they allegedly offered much more than pampering for sore muscles. The investigation began in June after several neighboring business owners voiced their concerns about the number of men showing up to the parlors.

Together with the Oklahoma Bureau of Narcotics' Human Trafficking Division, police made four arrests after undercover officers were allegedly offered prostitution services. It happened at the Oriental Pearl Massage, Studio E Salon, 7th Heaven Spa and Massage, and Singapore Massage Parlor.

The women arrested were 43-year-old Deana Wasilk from Portland, Oregon, 52-year-old Somkhouane Souvannaleuang from Tulsa, 55-year-old Xuemin Hu from Alhambra, California, and 57-year-old Wi Chappell from Hampton, Georgia.

Officials say the women appeared to be willing participants, but this bust could lead them to a human trafficking ring.
